The President—The Constitution creates the President largely apart from Congress. At the time of the founding, politics was a private, social, economic life-time of the President. For example, the Constitution requires Congress to advise and consent to the President's appointments, but the President has the power to appoint and remove his own officers, judges, and ministers. The President also has the power to grant pardons, to make treaties, to receive ambassadors, to appoint and remove judges, and to appoint and remove officers of the armed forces. The President also has the power to grant pardons, to make treaties, to receive ambassadors, to appoint and remove judges, and to appoint and remove officers of the armed forces.

The President's duties, however, are to
